

GOODRICH COOK WHITE, A. B. of Emory, M. A. of Columbia, Ph.D. of Chicago, professor, dean, and now President of Emory University. Able administrator and executive, he has frequently held high office in those agencies which seek to maintain and improve the standards of higher education in the South, and has been leader in the establishment of the University Center, in Atlanta, which coordinates the work of all the institutions of higher learning in that area, for cooperative graduate work. As a trustee of three colleges in his region and member of the Board of General Education of the Methodist Church, he has won a deserved reputation as an educator and leader whose advice is widely sought; as a social scientist he has received acclaim, as regional member of the Social Science Research Council, ^{and} of the President's Committee on Higher Education and as Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Capable, devoted, untiring, he lends distinction to the high office he graces; and this sister university is happy to honor his merit.

By vote of the Faculty and the Trustees of the University of North Carolina we confer upon you the degree of Doctor of Laws.
