

AUBREY LEE BROOKS. Native of North Carolina, graduate in 1893, of the Law Department of this University, lawyer, author and public-minded citizen, he has through a long and illustrious career in the law, served a distinguished group of clients both public and private. For ten years he was general solicitor for the ninth judicial district, and from time to time he has held offices of trust and honor in the community, the state and the nation. As an author, he has made a notable contribution in the field of American biography with his volumes Walter Clark, Fighting Judge, and Southern Lawyer, his autobiography; as co-editor of the Papers of Walter Clark, he has enriched the resources of historians in making readily available these useful documents. A true friend of the University, he has by word and deed, supported the ideals for which she stands. Eloquent, witty, full of wise saws and modern instances, as a good lawyer should be, he represents with grace and charm, a great tradition in this state, the man of law who is also a man of letters, a scholar, and a gentlemen.
