

NATHAN MARSH PUSEY, President of Harvard University, holder of more than a score of honorary degrees, humanist and educational statesman, brings to his office a sanity and wisdom born of his classical training, and a vision of the future for American education which has inspired his faculty and student body to continue the leadership which is universally accorded the institution over which he presides.

Hence the oldest state university is happy to join her sister institutions in bestowing on the president of the oldest university in the United States the degree of Doctor of Laws.

October 12, 1960